

Do you know a teenager who works hard to help others?

Announcing the 2nd annual Canada's Top Teen Philanthropist Contest

Young people lead all other age groups in their desire to help the less fortunate among us, according to a new poll to support Canada's Top Teen Philanthropist Contest. Sponsored by Mackenzie, the survey of 13-19 year olds is part of a program to identify Canada's most charitable teens and acknowledge the winner with a $5,000 donation to their favourite charity, plus a $1,000 personal award to acknowledge their outstanding efforts. The contest will also recognize the five runners-up with $500 each to the charity of their choice.

So if you know a teenager who works hard to help others, be sure to let them know about the contest. The winner could be your child or one of your clients' children; Canada's Top Teen Philanthropist Contest is open to all Canadians age 13-19.

Last year, Jane Wu of Calgary, Alberta was named Canada's Top Teen Philanthropist. A year later, the search begins again. We are seeking a teen who not only embodies the philanthropic spirit, but is a community leader who has made a difference in the lives around them.

How to enter Submissions welcome from September 22 – November 2, 2009
Winners to be announced in December 2009

Full contest rules and criteria are available at • www.mackenziefinancial.com/teen.

Through a simple and brief entry form, Canadians aged 13-19 are encouraged to share their generous stories for the chance to be rewarded for their tremendous efforts.
